To cloud or not to cloud, that is the question.

With apologies to William Shakespeare, when it comes to business communications systems, that really is the question many business managers find themselves wrestling with every day. The increasing number of cloud-based communications solutions available and the sheer volume of content explaining the benefits of the cloud have made it difficult to manage a business without dealing with the cloud question.

In many ways, it's difficult to avoid the reality that all roads on the business communications technology journey eventually lead to the cloud.

When choosing how you move your business to the cloud with Mitel, first consider all the needs of the business, the path that you want to take and the partners you work with.

Business needs should dictate your route to Mitel Cloud

- As technology and your business evolve, your communications strategy should, too. It should be an ongoing strategic effort enabled by the key questions that will inform your decisions on the road to the cloud:
- How do my employees collaborate?
- How does my organisation handle customer interactions?
- Do our systems integrate well and do they improve efficiency?
- Are we taking advantage of our system by staying current with all the new features available or are we behind on updates?
- Do we need to move to the cloud to improve efficiency or can we do more with what we have?
- How are we prepared to harness cloud technologies when it is time to make the move?

Choosing the path that best suits your business

- Once you know where you are in your technology evolution process, it will be easier to determine how you are going to make the journey to the cloud.
- Since every business is unique, with specific communication system requirements, the road to the cloud is populated by a variety of travellers.
- While some organisations may be ready to go directly to the cloud, others may have to take a more scenic route.
